(10 marks)

There were light bruises and cuts all over my face, all caused by surgical masks. The year was 2020, during the hardest times of many Singaporeans. It was perfectly normal to see a lot of beds, all occupied, coming our way along the packed hospital corridors. I slipped on my hazmat suit as I hurriedly made my way to the Intensive Care Unit (ICU). The ICU, usually for people in critical condition, was now set up specially for infected patients of the novel coronavirus.

5

I went to check on the patients who had been infected. When I was busy attending to one of the patients, I heard a sudden high-pitched beeping sound that went on for ten seconds behind me. We have lost another one, again. I felt mournful as I saw the respiratory mask being taken off the patient. I felt like I had let my patients down. I constantly wished I was able to help them more. Feeling despondent, I made my way to the exit out of the ICU. At this moment in time, we have had hundreds of losses, and I was on the verge of throwing in the towel. However, there was still a sliver of hope in me, an inner voice telling me that I can do this. I knew fortune would usually favour the brave, and a sudden surge of determination to just persevere and do my best welled up within me.

10

I went about my shift that lasted almost an entire day. Finally, after what felt like days since I reported for work, I sat down at the Information Centre, feeling drained and fatigued. I took off my mask to get a brief respite and let out a sigh. After a few seconds, I put it back on and walked slowly to the end of the hall. Just then, there was the sound of a machine. It was loud and beeping at a constant but fast pace. It was louder than any other machine in the wards. I ran there as fast as my legs could carry me. I stumbled upon the sight of an old lady whose vitals were dropping. It was old Mrs Dorothy. I let out a slight gasp as I opened the door and rushed in, trying my best to help her. She had difficulty breathing. Her immune system was not strong enough to battle the virus within as she had multiple chronic illnesses. It was due to this that she was deemed unfit for the vaccine. I acted swiftly by injecting a solution into her drip and performed Cardio-Pulmonary Resuscitation (CPR). I was on the verge of breaking down. I did not want to lose another patient. I did not want to lose the fight in me. I just could not bear to see another loss.

Just when all hope was lost, I suddenly heard steady and slow-paced "beeps". I let out a huge sigh of relief followed by a small sob. Almost an hour after this incident, the nurses who came to aid Mrs Dorothy were still fussing over her. The frail lady muttered to me softly when I was about to leave, "Thank you for saving my life." I let out a slight smile despite knowing that she would not be able to see my facial expression. "Please get well," I replied, full of gratitude. I opened the door and left, knowing that the war was far from over but glad to have won this battle.
