The National Day Parade (NDP) National Education (NE) Show returned on 2 July 2022. This was after a two-year break. Thousands of Primary 5 students showed up at the Marina Bay floating platform. The students screamed in delight as various elements of the parade made their appearances. Many of the children held up their phones to capture the action. These included aerobatic displays by F-16 fighter jets and landings by the Red Lions parachutists.

The NE shows aim to provide the experience for Primary 5 students to gain a deeper understanding of what it means to be Singaporean and to forge ahead, as a nation, in the future. Singapore is in the midst of a new Covid-19 wave. Thus, the NDP organisers are working with partners to ensure that the NE shows are able to return safely in accordance with national guidelines.

Urban Gardens receives nearly two million visitors each year, making it one of the city's most popular attractions! The relatively predictable weather - warm temperature and regular rainfall - we get to enjoy all year round supports thousands of exotic plants gathered from around the world and across the island since 1952. You will see trees that are some of the largest of their kind, rare species of plants that are only found here, and plants that were cultivated to mark special events.

① Information Centre

On arriving at Urban Gardens, you can help yourselves to brochures, maps and fact sheets at no extra cost before you embark on your self-guided tour. A souvenir shop and cafe are also conveniently located here. Purchase a memento of your visit and refresh yourself with a snack and drink before departing from Urban Gardens.

② Friendship Arch

This was presented by the Friendship Arch Organisation to the city in 2002 and went on display in various prominent places for two years. It is made of tokens of goodwill from more than 100 countries and recognises the city's efforts to establish harmonious relations with them. There are fewer than 20 such arches around the world, and it has been a distinctive feature of Urban Gardens since 2004.

③ Gardeners' Cabin

In the olden days, staff used to have their meals and get some rest here. After it was refurbished in 2012, it became an ideal venue for weddings and dinner parties. When it is not closed for private events, visitors may enter to admire the elegant surroundings and thriving indoor plants.

④ Meteorological Station

Staff are rostered to record data on rainfall, wind direction and speed, cloud cover, and other weather conditions at hourly intervals throughout the day. The information is made available to the public at www.urbangardens.sg. Visitors who wish to learn about the station may visit the gallery at Level 1.

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80 which are on pages 6 to 8 in Booklet B.

"Where is it? We're going to be late!" Janice dropped to her hands and knees and began searching frantically for her wallet under the sofa. "Josh! Did you hide my wallet? We have to be at Grandpa's place for his birthday party!" Josh, Janice's younger four-year-old brother, smiled innocently at her, but she noticed the mischievous glint in his eye. "Josh," she tried her best not to shout. "Where did you put my wallet?" Josh grinned like a Cheshire cat. He reached behind one of the sofa cushions, pulled out her wallet and held it over her head triumphantly. Janice grabbed it. "Why hadn't I looked there before?" she muttered. 5

Approximately ten minutes later, the siblings reached the train station. Blush-faced and perspiring profusely, Janice let go of Josh's wrist and wiped the beads of perspiration off her forehead. Just then, the train arrived. Her smile faded when she realised that the commuters were 10 packed like sardines on the train. Immediately, Janice grabbed Josh's hand and as they stepped into the train, she commanded, "The train's really crowded today, Josh. Behave yourself, stick close to me, and no monkey business!" Josh nodded obediently as he stood in front of her, holding tightly to a rail. Janice smiled.

Finally, when it was time to alight the train, Janice quickly jostled her way through the crowd 15 to get onto the platform. "Phew, we made it!" Janice said. She turned around. Josh was nowhere to be seen. The crowd was still bustling around, but Josh was not amongst the people. "The train doors are closing," came the electronic voice, the voice that delivered the worst news that day. Soon, the crowd on the platform died down. The last thing Janice saw was Josh's little face at the train window, brows creased with anxiety. Just as Janice was about to call out Josh's name, the train disappeared 20 from view. "Josh!" Janice shouted as she rubbed her cheeks in a fluster.

Janice massaged her temples before wiping her sweaty palms on her jeans. Her mind was transported back to the time when she had wandered away on her own and was lost at the zoo. She could still vividly remember the towering figures surrounding her and none of them were her parents. "I do not want Josh to go through that same traumatic experience," Janice let out a sigh. 25

Janice took out her mobile phone and started punching in the digits of her mother's phone number. However, midway, she decided against it. If her mother found out that she had lost Josh, she would probably ground her for life. Janice kept her mobile phone back into the back pocket of her bag. She paced up and down the platform, fiddling with her hands continuously. Wild thoughts galloped through her mind like horses on a racecourse. "I would never be able to forgive myself if 30 I will never let such a thing happen," Janice thought.

Suddenly, Janice received a call. It was an unknown number. "Hello? Jlejie? I think I'm at Paya Lebar station! I'm calling from a kind lady's phone!" Josh cried out, in his panicky voice. "Don't worry, Josh, I'm coming," Janice said soothingly, hoping to allay her brother's fears. They said goodbye to each other and before she knew it, the train had reached Paya Lebar. Janice got off the 35 train hastily and looked around for Josh. Before she could even spot him, Josh came dashing towards her and wrapped her into a tight bear hug. Janice hugged him back. "Thank goodness I know where you are and I did not have to spend so much time looking for you!" she whispered. She was relieved that it did not turn out to be a wild-goose chase.

After thanking the kind lady for her help, they continued their way to their destination. Janice 40 made Josh walk in front of her and they boarded the returning train. "Thank you do not have to be put through that traumatic experience," she said as she gave Josh's wrist a gentle squeeze, shuddering at the thought of what she had experienced.
