The goblin shark is definitely not a beauty. Luckily, it does not need to look pretty since it is found in the ocean depths. A distinctive trait is its long protruding blade-like snout. It also has a pink body which is pretty unusual but, by far, the most bizarre aspect of this (17)
shark is its jaw – it has an extendable jaw with sharp teeth. The usefulness of this feature had been discussed deliberately among scientists but they agreed that this extendable jaw
makes it easier to catch prey.

The average length of a goblin shark is 1.6 metres and the longest recorded length is 3.8 metres. These animals are as slow as tortoises, which can make it hard for them to chase their prey. Although research suggests that it is not a particularly rare creature, the (19)
goblin shark lives mostly in areas which are uninhabited. This makes it difficult to track it (20)
for long periods of time.

Section I – Comprehension (10 x 2 marks)

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80.

Rainwater fell through the crack on the roof, creating a steady rhythm in our cramped room – home to our family of eight. My parents and my five younger siblings had been living in that room since the day I was born. Hunger was all I had ever known. I was eleven years old then and I had never known what being well-fed was like. I did not know what surplus meant and the only thing I had ever known was shortage. Shortage of food. Shortage of clean water. To make matters worse, my father was retrenched from his job when I turned twelve. The following year, my mother fell seriously ill. 5

Sometimes I woke up in the middle of the night feeling so hungry that I wanted to scream out loud, "Why! Why must I suffer so much?" However, each time I thought of the other seven people trying to sleep in the room, I refrained myself from doing so. At some point, hot tears started rolling down my cheeks and I could not stop the sobs that overcame me. The saddest thing was that sorrow was infectious. Soon, I could hear my siblings crying too. 10

Gradually, I learnt various ways to deal with hunger. I had learnt that if I drank enough water, hunger died. When my head started to spin from the daily labour and lack of food, I kept my eyes shut for a few seconds and dreamt of eating some delicious food – the kind I saw every day when I walked past the bakery. I did not know how any of the food tasted, but it looked beautiful so I imagined its delicious taste. 15 20

Every day since my mother fell ill, I had to stand at traffic junctions, begging people to buy window shields. Days went by under the blazing sun as I tried to earn a livelihood for my family. At times, the sun's intensity was so unbearable that I passed out due to the heat. Occasionally, a kind stranger sprinkled water on my face, offered me some water and left a coin in my hand. Sometimes, I lay on the pavement till I became conscious again, only to see seas of people passing by. 25

On days when I went out to the streets to sell window shields, I saw children in crisp white uniforms seated against the windows of their school buses. I wished I could go to school just like them instead of selling window shields. Once in a while, some children opened their snack boxes and I could not help but stare at the scrumptious food. Soon, the traffic light turned green and the school bus moved forward. I looked at the school bus until it was out of sight. 30

I used to wear rubber sandals every day, but when they turned into a shredded mess of rubber, I walked barefoot on the streets. On hot days, I felt like I was walking on molten coal and on rainy days, I slipped and slid through the mud and grime. It did not help when the grumbling sound in my stomach haunted me everywhere I went. I wished it would go away, so that I could focus on my work. 35

Every night, I hoped that one day, life for my family would change. My brothers and sisters would not have to go to bed crying of hunger. I would earn enough money for my family to be able to move out of the cramped room which reeked of stale air and live in a bigger place. Hope was all that was left for me then. 40
