Maggie disliked sports. Sports meant one thing – choosing teams. Choosing teams meant that Maggie would be the last choice, as always.⁽¹⁶⁾ Maggie was new. When Ms Jen asked for captain volunteers, the usual hands shot up. Maggie sighed. Glancing around, she noticed that Jasmine looked downcast too. She thought, I'm not the only one. Sometimes Jasmine is chosen last too. She was often picked on due to her small stature. Just then, Maggie had an idea.

Ms Jen asked, "Anyone else would like to volunteer today?"⁽¹⁷⁾ Maggie felt her hand rise slowly. She looked again at Jasmine and took a big breath. The class murmured, sceptical that she was stepping up.⁽¹⁸⁾ "Maggie, you get first pick," said Ms Jen. "Jasmine." The class started chuckling to themselves. Was this a joke? Jasmine had tried to score on the wrong side in previous games.⁽¹⁹⁾ Maggie repeated, "Jasmine." Eyes wide with incredulity,⁽²⁰⁾ Jasmine took her place beside Maggie. A small smile broke on each of their faces. They both knew what it felt like to be the last choice, but not today.

Shining the Spotlight on Animal Trainers

Do you know your pets well? Do you know what it means when they make certain sounds or behave in certain ways? Animal trainer, Thomas Chia, has had pets all his life and is convinced that we can gain insight into how animals think by studying how they play. Unlike most other animals, dogs continue playing throughout their lives, regardless of age, and that naturally makes them the best choice for his research.

To begin with, Thomas read everything he could about canines. Besides observing his own dogs play, he took them to various places and filmed them interacting with other dogs. Back home, he repeatedly watched the video recordings in slow motion so that he could analyse their behaviour patterns.

As time went by, Thomas' research showed him that dogs expressed their thoughts and feelings in a number of ways.

Thomas' dogs,
Chief, Lexi and Russ

What dogs do to get different messages across

Dogs wag their tails a little more to the right when they see their owners or something that appeals to them, and a little more to the left when they see unfamiliar yet non-threatening faces and surroundings.

Dogs do not just bark! They also make sounds like growling, moaning, grunting, yelping, and howling to communicate.

Dogs that are already familiar with each other slap their paws down when they meet. This is how they say hello to their friends!

Dogs bend down on their front legs to invite other dogs to play. They usually stick their tails up in the air at the same time!

When the opportunity for you to spend some time with dogs comes up, see if Thomas' deductions can help you understand them better!

What do animal trainers do?

Animal trainers:

- ★ interact with the animals to help them get used to human voice and contact
- ★ teach the animals to respond appropriately to different cues
- ★ ensure that the animals have a proper diet and get adequate exercise
- ★ monitor the animals' health and physical condition in order to recommend medical care when necessary
- ★ develop training programmes to suit the animals' temperaments, aptitudes and mastery of skills

WE NEED MORE ANIMAL TRAINERS!

Do you have a love of animals, patience and good communication skills?
Are you willing to get your hands dirty and do unglamorous work?
Can you perform tasks which may be physically strenuous at times?

In recent years, the number of people keeping pets has steadily increased. Unfortunately, many of these well-intentioned owners do not know how to ensure the well-being of their pets. That is where animal trainers come in!

The Animal Welfare Institute is offering four runs of a free two-day introductory course on animal behaviour to anyone aged 10 and above! If you are interested in finding out more about training animals, please write in to Ms Paige Hong at paige_hong@awi.sg to sign up for one of the following sessions. Only a limited number of places are available, so hurry!

Run 1
15 and 16 May 2021

The package was lying by the front door. A nondescript carton without any distinctive features, it was sealed with tape and had their names and address on it – "Mr and Mrs Tan Li Joon, 88 River Street". As per her daily routine, Mrs Tan picked it up and carried it into the house.

That evening, Mrs Tan started to unpack the carton. Curiosity aroused, she showed her husband its contents. Inside it was a push-button unit fastened to a small wooden box. A glass dome covered the button. Mrs Tan tried to lift it off, but it was locked in place. She clicked her tongue in frustration, but then turned the unit over and saw a folded piece of paper taped to the bottom of the box. She pulled it off. The note read: "Mr Soon will call on you at 8:00 p.m."

Mrs Tan placed the carton beside her on the couch. As she expected, the doorbell rang at 8:00 p.m. A man wearing a suit was in the hallway. Mrs Tan held out the box and signalled her disinterest in buying anything. The man's eyes widened and he said, "No, no. I am not a salesman. Let me explain." He reached into his coat pocket and withdrew a small sealed envelope. "Inside here is a key to the bell unit dome. It is linked to our company's computer system. Once you open it and push the button, somewhere in the world, someone you do not know will lose something that they treasure. In return, you will receive a payment of $10 000."

Mrs Tan stared at the man in disbelief. She shook her head in disapproval and said, "It is wrong to cause people to lose something they treasure and get paid for it. This must be a scam. Or a social experiment. Or a psychological research. She then placed the carton outside the gate and closed the door firmly behind her.

However, her husband had a different perspective on the matter. He said, "Mr Soon has assured us that we will not know who the affected person is. We are in financial difficulties as I am unemployed. We need the money to buy a rice cooker and refrigerator for the family so it is understandable. This is my plan." However, Mrs Tan stood her ground. There was an unspoken tension between them.

That night, her husband brought the carton into the house stealthily and unlocked the dome cover. Taking a deep breath, he pushed the button. The next day, there was a news report about a burglary and the family discovered that the family heirloom, a diamond necklace, had been stolen. At the same time, Mrs Tan received a notification on her phone that a sum of $10 000 had been transferred to her account. She was furious when she found out what her husband had done. However, he simply said, "Yes, I pushed the button. But the loss suffered by the family is of little consequence. Did you know that the owner of the house is a millionaire?" Without any remorse, he bought the rice cooker and refrigerator that they so badly needed. Seeing the newly bought items, Mrs Tan relented too. For once, there was harmony between the couple.

Mr Tan felt encouraged by his success. One night, he decided to pull the stunt again. He pushed the button again. The next day, there was a news report about a famous athlete losing his Olympic gold medal. The athlete was devastated as he had put in years of blood, sweat and tears. To this, Mr Tan said, "The medal is just a physical reward. His effort and hard work are what count." Feeling unapologetic, Mr Tan then proceeded to buy a motorcycle for himself with the money.

For the third time, Mr Tan pushed the button again. Curiously, although they received the money, this time there was no news report about any missing 'treasure'. That evening, however, Mr Tan could hear Mrs Tan sobbing like her heart would break. His heart ached with regret. She had lost her most treasured item, her diary containing photographs of their young daughter who had passed on the previous year in an accident. Mr Tan knew what that diary had meant to his wife. "The only wish I have now is to turn the clock back," he wept.
